The dinner meeting, at the request of Mr. Lynch, was considered especially significant by the Irish government because the outcome could determine the extent of Dubin's cooperation in Ulster's new administration. Britain is scheduled to disclose, early in January, the make-up and structure of the assembly and government that will control the six counties of Northern Ireland. This new government follows one year of direct rule by Britain. Although details about the new government have not yet been announced, Britain gave clear indications last month that the overhaul of the Ulster government would mean broader power in the hands of the Roman Catholic minority. Britain also said that Uister would remain within

The aide, Hoang Due Nha, said that the North Vietnamese were being stubborn and were making 'unacceptable demands."

Mr. Nha, who is an adopted nephew of Mr. Thieu's and whose influence in the government far exceeds that which would usually be associated with his title as press secretary and personal secretary to the president, said his information was based on reports from South Vietnamese officials to Paris who have been in daily touch with Henry A. Kissinger, the American negotiator.

Mr. Nha reported the lack of progress in a conversation with South Vietnamese reporters, some of whom work for Western news agencies. He refused to go into detail on the negotiations, particularly leaving unanswered questions of what "unacceptable demands" the North Vietnamese had been mak-, ing and how they had been "stubborn."

Neither the Americans nor the North Vietnamese would say · Newspaper Story

Mr. Nha's comments were echoed in the lead story of Tin Song, a newspaper that he partly finances and which is often thought to reflect the thinking in the Presidential Palace.

The story in Tin Song said Mr. Thier had a special meeting with his senior advisers today and at one point said, "The North Vietnamese Communists are still stubborn and maintain their unreasonable requirements."

Some American observers suggested that what Mr. Vha was describing was simply the reaction of North Vietnam to South Vietnam's demand for rertain modifications in the nine-point draft proposal made public by the North Vietnamese and the Americans in late October. The principal South Vietnamese demand, enunciated re-peatedly by Mr. Thieu and ms subordinates, has been that North Vietnam withdraw all of its troops from the South.

The North Vietnamese have never officially admitted having any troops in the South, and thus there was no mention of their being withdrawn in the draft proposal. American officials say there are about 140,000 North Vietnamese soldiers in the South. The South Vietnamese say there

Revised U.S. Proposals Said to Cause Deadlock

By Jonathan C. Randal

PARIS, Nov. 24 (WP).—The peace talks here between Henry A. Kissinger and North Vietnamese negotiators have reached a crisis point and their continuation depends on a crucial session scheduled tomorrow, informed sources said today.

So serious was the deadlock after yesterday's six-hour negotiating sessioo, the sources said, that both Mr. Kissinger and Le Duc The requested further instructions from their respective capitals whether to continue the talks or return home.

Their unscheduled meeting today in Choisy-le-Rol, near here was not concerned with substantire negotiations, the sources added, but rather designed to help mask the impasse pending the crucial instructions. So, too, were the smiles and joking that Mr. Kissinger and Mr. The engaged in yesterday for photographers and television

At the center of the deadlock are what the North Vietnamese consider to be vastly revised American demands, which Mr. Kissinger presented Monday. The talks were resumed then in an effort to complete the draft cease-fire accord worked out last month.

So incensed were the North Vietnamese at what they see as the major touchening of U.S. demands that they, in turn, insisted on major revisions of the draft, which previously they said was final. At one point yesterday, Mr. Tho, a usually reserved negotiator, became so angry that he began shouting and pounding on the table to signal his displeasure, In essence, the United States was said to have supported almost all of Saigon's objections to the draft accord, in marked difference to the purposely ambigu-ous language Mr. Kissinger ac-cepted last month.

Militarily the United States demanded mutual withdrawal of American and North Vietnamese troops from South Vietnam. Politically, the United States was said to have acceded to Saigon's demands to eliminate the soing of power with the Viet Cong and Salgon after a cease-fire. The North Vietnamese retorted by again demanding the immediate resignation of President Nguyen Van Thieu of South Vietnam, by refusing to accept mutual troop withdrawal and by insisting on the immediate release of political prisoners in the South and on the neutralist presence in the transition-period machinery.

The sources gave the following detailed account of the first four When they resumed Monday

Mr. Kissinger presented a series of what were termed radical comterproposals, including Saigon-in-finenced demands not included in last month's draft accord.

3 Hanoi Units Said to Rebel, Attack Viet Cong

PARIS, Nov. 24 (UPI).—A French newspaper reported today that a North Vietnamese Army faction opposing any negotiated peace attacked the Viet Cong headquarters near Saigon two weeks ago but the rebellion failed and its leaders were punished. Le Monde said in a report from its Salgon correspondent that the attack by troops dedicated to Communist military victory came at dawn Nov. 10. The dissident troops, slightly more than 1,000 in number, over-ran the Viet Cong field headquarters but were unable to capture top Viet Cong policy-makers, the newspaper said. The Viet Cong office in Paris denied the report. Spokesman Ly Van Sau said: This Le Monde report is a total fabrication, spread by Saigon. There is no word of truth in it." Le Monde said it learned of the incident from "a reliable and very well informed source." The newspaper said North Vietnamese Gen. Le Vinh Khoa commanded the attack, which was crushed two days later by forces under Gen. Tran Nam Trung, the Viet Cong's defense minister.

Since the October draft made no mention of this demand, its appearance was seen as amounting to a demand that Hanoi demands in theu of withdrawal. The centerpiece of the political demands was the elimination of the so-called neutralist segment from the National Reconciliation Council, which the draft accord stipulated should share responsibility in the transition period with the Viet Cong and Saigon for carrying out the cease-fire. The new American position was designed to meet Salgon's publicly expressed fears that any threesegment organization was simply a form of coalition government, which President Thicu has conaistently rejected.

Furthermore, nowhere in the revised American proposals was there any mention of three-segment cooperation at lower levels of government. Although the accord did not detail what was intended. It had been widely supposed that three-segment coordinating committees would be set up at provincial, village and perhaps even hamlet levels.

No Hint of Neutrality

The revised American proposala also lacked any of the draft's languago that had hinted at the future neutrality of South Vietnam, once again apparently in deference to Saigon's opposition. Similarly, the revised American proposals were said to water down the already vague draft language on the exact task of the National Reconciliation Councli, which had been defined as "activating" the application of the cease-fire's clauses. Furthermore, North Vletnam refused to envisage mutual troop withdrawal, insisted on the immediate release of all political prisoners and detainees held in South Vietnam and maintained its demand for a three-segment

This finally provoked Mr. Tho's fit of anger. In essence, the sources added, he warned that the original Oct. 31 deadline for the signing of the agreement had expired, that the American elections were over and that unless the United States got down to what he called serious negotiations the tempo of North Viet-nam's war effort in the South could be stepped up.

Supreme Court's Guidelines

U.S. Judges' Power Widened By New Rules of Evidence

By Warren Weaver Jr.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24 (NYT). New rules of evidence issued for the federal court system by the Supreme Court this week give more discretion to judges admit evidence in both civil and criminal cases where access previously been restricted both by statute and court ruling. The set of rules, issued without fanfare Monday, would be the first to apply uniformly across the country. They are designed to open up the judicial process to more relevant informs-

In the words of one lawyer familiar with the code, "The old rules said: Nothing is admissible except the following; the new rules say: Everything is admissible except the following.' It's a whole new attitude,"

Some of the rules seem likely to generate considerable controversy. These include a relaxation of the traditional ban on receiving hearsay evidence and establishment of a "secrets of state" system that denies the courts access to information whose disclosure the government regards as "contrary to the public

In Effect in 1973

The new code was largely draftby an advisory committee of e U.S. Judicial Conference, headed by Albert E. Jenner jr., a Chicago lawyer. It was official-Supreme Court and will go into effect next July 1 if Congress does not take any contrary ac-

The rules are expected to hava considerable impact on the state courts, although they do not apply there. Codes of civil and criminal procedure for the federal courts issued earlier by the Judicial Conference were widely copied at the state level in the interest of uniformity.

Until now, there have been no uniform evidence rules for the federal courts. Often one rule prevails in one jurisdiction and another in the adjoining one. In many areas, the courts have tried to operate under a series of judicial interpretations that had never been harmonized or codi-

During seven years of study and drafting, the Jenner commit-tee changed several major rules of evidence that have generally been observed in federal courts. For example, the new rules permit a much wider and less contrived use of expert testimony, authorizing witnesses with "spe-cialized knowledge" to appear and explain the principles of their field without necessarily providing an opinion on the case before the court.

This is likely to reduce considerably the use of the "hypotheti-cal question." under which a lawyer sought from a psychiatrist or other expert his opinion on a sanity question or another technical matter by constructing a question—sometimes taking an hour or more—that incorporated all the evidence before the court. Another : najor change involves opening up the cross-examina-tion process in trials. Under the old rules, a lawyer could crossexamine only on subjects raised with the same witness in direct examination by his own lawyer. Under the new rules, there is no restriction, although the judge has discretion to limit ques-

And in disputing charges that "we are too fat overseas." he sald that secret studies show that only 13 percent of U.S. officials assigned abroad are working for the State Department.

Mr. Macomber spoke as Mr. Nixon's continuing review of the executive branch sent rumor waves across Washington. There has been speculation of impending shifts in top government posts, of shakeups in the various agencies, of job cuts and -in the foreign-affairs establishment-of streamlining to tighten executive control over far-flung federal activities on the international scene.

One frequent conversation piece in the capital is Henry A. Kissinger's prominent foreignpolicy role as a presidential adviser, and whether William P. Rogers will stay on as secretary

Mr. Macomber, a Republican who has submitted his changeof-term resignation along with other presidential appointees, saw the issue not as who holds what post but as one of adapting to the increased complexities of a modern world. "This is an infinitely more profound problem that the President and the government is struggling with than simply personalities Kissinger versus Rogers or whatever," Mr. Macomber said. He strongly denied that the State Department, whose employment rolls he said had been cut one-fifth over the past four years has a "swollen bureaucracy" at home or abread.

He said that secret charts of the staffing at 348 U.S. missions around the world show that well under 10 percent at American embassies are State Department officials in substantive jobs. The secrecy labels are applied to conceal the number of CIA men at the overseas posts. His 13 percent figure includes

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24 (AP), administrative and consular personnel. Over-all, more than 25,000 Americans were attached to U.S. missions around the world in mid-1972

Mr. Macomber said that the State Department is now the smallest of the regular federal departments, with a total of about 10,000 Americans on the payroll at home and abroad and with a budget this year of nearly $600 million.

"We are about the size of the Library of Congress," he said.

The four-engine C-141 jet transport has the range to fly nonstop from Karachi, around Cape Comorin, avoiding Indla, and on to Bangkok, But this long flight is considered impractical. For the time being MAC is flying east from Charleston, S.C., to Madrid and turning back, The other MAC flight leaves Travis Air Force Base, Fairfield, Calif., and goes as far as Bangkok before turning back.

Italians Publish Nude Photos Said to Be of Jacqueline Onassis

ROME, Nov. 24 (Reuters).—An Italian magazine, Playmen, today published nine pages of full-color nude photographs that it said had been taken of Mrs. Jacqueline Onassis while she was on the Greek island of Skorpios.

The magazine gave no information about how the photographers had managed to break security at the island home of Aristotle Onassis, who married the former Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy in 1968, five years after the assassination of President

John F. Kennedy.

It quoted rumors that the money paid for the photographs in Italy was between $50,000 and $75,000.

According to Il Giorno, the photographers used underwater diving gear and waterproof cameras. The newspaper reported some narrow escapes from Mr. Onassis's guards—including an occasion when one photographer, to avoid being seen, stayed underwater until he was half-drowned.

The Foreign Policy of Economics

President Nixon is now preparing himself for the possibility that economics and trade will be the largest part of his foreign policy next year. He is dissatisfied with the way that this government makes up ite mind on foreign economic issues, and he is right about that. But reorganizing the bureaucracy is the least interesting part of the overhaul that he is now undertaking. The essential question is not the precise flow of the paperwork, or the relationship between the State Department and the Treasury. It is the strength and the stamina of this administration to pursue the President's admirable and repeated declarations in favor of free and expanding trade throughout the World trade is a highly uncomfortable sublect for governments and the men who run them. The fluctuations of imports and exports mean jobs at home. They affect levels of earnings and standards of llving. The other aspects of foreign policy, from Peking to SALT, hardly touch the daily life of the nation. But the rules that govern the commerce in shoes and television sets are another matter altogether.

The secretary of commerce, Mr. Peterson, suggested in a recent speech that Mr. Nixon's sudden change of economic direction last year prepared the world for a new economic equilibrium of competition and rising production. One hopes so. But it ought not be entirely forgotten that last year's new policy was accompanied by a sudden stiff surtax on imports, and loud threats of a trade war. The period of the surtax was also the period of squeezing new quota restrictions on textile imports from the Japanese, and further import quotas to protect the sluggish American steel industry. The curtax was lifted at the end of the year, but the quotas are still very much with us. The principle of free trade is simple. The practice is more difficult.

One of the reasons that it has become very difficult indeed lately is the enormous confusion within the government over American basic purposes. It is not clear to our trading partners, or to foreign businessmen, or even to the various branches of the United States government, precisely what the administration is driving toward. Mr. Peterson accurately observed that the United States has traditionally treated the world economy as a second-rate issue, safe for all but the technicians to ignore. Suddenly it is a first-rate issue.

The disorganization within the government itself has now reached a point at which foreign diplomats here complain bitterly of taking economic inquiries to the State Department only to be told that Commerce Is handling them; and heing told at Commerce that it's a Treasury matter; and hearing along the way that the real holdup is in one of the congressional committees, or perhaps even at the White House. Without large guiding rules that everyone can see, each narrow case is fought over and settled individually on terms that usually depend on the political forces involved.

Put broadly, the real question is how much foreign competition the United States is now willing to run. But the answer depends very greatly on the rules, and whether most Americans are willing to accept them as fair. Those rules now have to be worked out, and the process is just about to begin. It will take place in a counterpoint between Congress and two separate international negotiations, one on money and the other on trade. The congressional debate will begin as soon as the administration introduces its trade legislation early next year. Managing this process will be an extraordinary test of Mr. Nixon's political skill.

Visas for Ideas?

Well before the end of the 1970s, a major technological development is likely to revolutionize world communications. It takes the form of a new generation of communications satellites that will be able to transmit radio and television broadcasts directly to home receivers, eliminating steps which now put barriers between satellite transmissions and mass audiences all over the world.

In the light of history, it was hardly surprising to find the Soviet Union earlier this year announcing its unhappiness at the prospect of direct people-to-people commuication via satellite. Moscow has even satellites broadcasting to the Soviet audience ideas the Kremlin does not approve. What is surprising—and dismaying—is the recent majority vote by a UNESCO committee in Paris backing a similarly restrictive philosophy. The UNESCO committee has come out, in effect, for giving every country censorship right over what satellites may and may not broadcast to the people of each receiving country. The effect of the committee's vote is to establish in international law the concept of visas for ideas,

A host of rationalizations has been offered in an embarrassed effort to justify this effort to legitimize censorship of the global air waves. The French, for example, are reported to be worried that the English language may overwhelm French in France and its former colonies. The hobgoblin of a satellite devoted to nothing but pornographic television programs has been raised in some cuarters.

But all such objections are unconvincing for believers in maximum freedom of exchange for ideas. There is no reason why an international analogue of this country's hinted broadly that it intends to destroy Federal Communications Commission should not lay down basic ground rules-far short of censorship—to govern direct satellite broadcasts to homes. Only regimes afraid to expose their peoples to free competition in ideas can back the restrictive provision voted at the meeting of UNESCO, an organization which up to now has had a proud record of encouraging the free flow of

Belgium's Language Problems

The resignation of Gaston Eyskens's coalition government follows a pattern familiar in Belgium, Each time a government is formed. its members set out to try to resolve the issue which brought down the previous government. And each time their good intentions fall short. The average life of governments in Belgium is a mere 20 months. The Issue which thwarts them is the old familiar language problem. Its very persistence shows that regional differencesof custom, manners or language-are very far from being flattened out or "harmonized" within the European community.

No one can doubt, looking at the example of Belgium, that all the deep and cherished differences, some healthy and othere lees so, which exist among European peoples will continue to color our common culture. -From the Times (London).

Immigration and Britain

It would be manifestly unjust if, in acceding to the Common Market, Britain were to give European immigrants an advantage over those from the Commonwealth, whatever their origin, in obtaining permission to live and work in the country. Critics have justifiably pointed out that many Commonwealth citizens have fought two World Wars and it would be invidious in the extreme if allens against whom Britain and its allies fought were now to be given priority.

Commonwealth citizens holding British passports, and this includes many from Hong Kong, should not be at a disadvantage compared with Europeans. This would amount to a breach of falth and disavowal of the nationality that Britain has conferred willingly in the past upon its colonial and Commonweath subjects.

Andreotti Seems in Control

Despite a spate of troubles in Italy. Mr. Andreotti seems to be in control. He appealed earlier this week for a "period of tranquility," which sounds a bit wistful at a time when three million people are out on strike. Virtually all the strikes, however, are demonstrations in support of new national contracts. The outlook therefore is not so bad as it looks. In recent months the parliament have come to respect the prime minister's advoitness for handling awkward situations. The major problems remain, and the worst of them is inflation. The approaching round of wage increases will make matters worse. In this context it seems curious that Mr. Andreottl should have chosen to increase ministerial salaries, almost doubling his own pay in the process.

The Tyranny of Words

By James Reston up," and back the President when he makes tough decisions.

WASHINGTON—In the brutal language of politics, not only men and women but words lose their reputations. The word "appessement," for example, was a casualty of World War II, and in the present struggle between freedom and authority in America, "permissive" and "permissiveness" have come to mean a weakness or slackness of human character and a menace to the Republic.

This was not what these words originally meant. Even the latest American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language says the word "appease" means "to bring to placate, soothe, to or relieve"-in other words, to do what every sensible family does to hold things

But since Neville Chamberlain in the tragic struggle at Munich before the last world war, "apmaking dishonorable concessions to evil men to save your hide for a little while. And "permissive" is now going through the same transformation from meaning "lenient, tolerant, permitting disto meaning the defiance of all traditional values and an invitation to moral and politlcal chaos.

Orwell Essay

George Orwell noted this connection between the imprecision of language and the corruntion of politics long ago. In a brilliant essay on "Politics and the English Language." he said: "A man may take to drink because he feels himself to be a failure, and then fail all the more completely because he drinks.

"It is rather the same thing that is happening to the English language. It becomes ugly and inaccurate because our thoughts are foolish, but the slovenimess of our language makes it easier for us to have foolish thoughts . . . if thought corrupts language language can also corrupt thought ..."

This may very well be what is happening now here in America. President Nixon, after his spectacular victory in this month'e election, has committed himself to a battle in his second term against "permissiveness" in the nation. He has said we are slack and indisciplined. He has even been bold enough to say that his own administration is loose and overmanned, and needs to be trimmed down, and no fair-minded person could dispute him on

But in the process, he has been very imprecise and partisan in defining a very good point. He has left the country with the impression that he thinks the welfare system is a mess, which it is, that the militant young women blacks and university protesters have affronted the comfortable American middle-class majority, which they have, and therefore that he must try in his second term to put an end to this permissiveness

It is ironical that Nixon has emerged from his landslide victory calling for change and moral reformation, which was the thems of his defeated opponent in the election campaign, but he is fighting "permissiveness" on very narrow grounds.

'Shape Up'

He is saying that the welfare system is slack and corrupt, and that the poor, the young and the noisy blacks, women, and dis-senters in the universities, press, television, and even in the business community should "shape of scholarly conversations, the fund-raisers who financed his

But he doesn't carry the good fight against selfishness and permissiveness all the way, He is for disciplining the cheaters on welfare bot not for disciplining cheaters in business. He is against "throwing dollars" at the problems of health, education, and welfare, but he is throwing doilars at the problems of defense at the Pentagon, and buying a voiuniteer defense force with a rising Pentagon budget of more than $80 billion a year.

Nixon will be 60 years old in January before his inauguration for a second term. He knows more than most about the "permissiveness" of his own generation. He is undoubtedly right in calling for more authority, discipline and sacrifice, but this probably means more taxes and austerity for the comfortable middle class that elected him for a second term, and so far he has not called on them to sacrifice.

He is against permissiveness, which he defines as acquiescence to blackmail by the welfare poor. and weak accommodation with young dissenters, but he is permissive with the most wasteful military establishment in history at the Pentagon, permissive with defense contractors, permissive with his political allies at the Watergate, and permissive with

In short, the President is in danger of debasing his own principle. Very few people in this town would argue against his cry for more discipline in American life, but to be effective, it has to be applied across the board, not only on welfare policy but on tax policy. Words have to be used accurately to have effective meanirg. If Nixon is to use his second term to bring an end to "permissiveness," meaning slackness a. . selfishness, then, to be effective, it has to be applied to the per-missiveness of the rich and the comfortable majority as well as to the poor.

The young did not invent permissiveness. It is all around us at the top of the government and business and the professions, practice the slackness they deplore in the young.

Given this situation, it is odd that Nixon uses these words and principles so casually. He has won a great victory, and now has a chance to make a new beginning. But if he is going to start it with a moral crusade agains: permissiveness, he is probably going to have to apply it to the rich and the middle class as well as to the poor.

GOP Grumbling

Richard M. Nixon As Party Leader

By Kenneth Crawford

WASHINGTON.—Assessing the consequences, many influential Republicans seem to be about as unhappy with President Nixon's electoral victory as their Democratic opposite numbers are with Sen. McGovern's defeat. Republican unhappiness derives from the feeling that Mr. Nixon was so determin to score & vindicating triumph for himself and his administration that he was indifferent to the welfare of his own party and that his neglect will prove costly. .

Grumbling about the President's failure to campaign vigorously for Republicans at the Congress sional and state levels started long before election day. The grumpling surfaced in public complaint when the vote count revealed that Democrats had emerged from the Nixon sweep still in firm control of both branches of Congress and most state governments

Sen. Peter H. Dominick of Colorado, chairman of the Senate Republican Campaign Committee, told the Associated Press that party unity had been severely damaged by the nature ci the campaign. He said he doubted that Mr. Nixon realized the depth of resentment among Republican senators. It will not be easy, Sen Dominick predicted for the White House to invoke party loyalty on behalf of its legislative recommendations in the next Congress.

Split Responsibility

Similar sentiments were expressed by other Republican office holders. Ben. Lowell Welker jr. of Connecticut, for example, said the Republicans should never again split responsibility between the National Committee and a separate organization devoted to the single objective of electing a President, as it did this time by permitting creation and independent operation of The Committee for the Reelection of the

Of Law and Men

By Anthony Lewis

ONDON.—In the period of domestic American Communist-hunting after War II, one outrageous case was thet of Edward K. Barsky, a New York doctor. When he refused to give the House Un-American Activities Committee the records of the Joint Anti-Factist Refugee Committee, Dr. Barsky was jailed for contempt. The New York Regents then suspended his license to practice medicine, and the Supreme Court found that ac-tion constitutional, Justice Black, Frankfurter and Douglas dis-

The episode of Dr. Barsky came to mind when Prof. Samuel Popkin of Harvard was led off to jail in handcuffs the other day. He had been held in contemp for refusing to answer, a federal prosecutor's questions, before a grand jury, about persons who mew of the existence of the Pentagon Papers.

The two cases are of course different in their settings. But they are alike in showing how. even in a constitutional democracy, vindictive men may abuse authority: how they may use the law to threaten interests of privacy and professional integrity that a civilized society treasures.

Vietnam Interest

Prof. Popkin, to his present misfortune, is interested in Vietnam. He had heard of the multivolume history of American involvement there before it leaked out as the Pentagon Papers; so had a number of other persons with whom he talked, some of them government officials.

The prosecution made no claim that Popkin had anything to do with the leaking of the papers or knew who did. It evidently wanted him to list people who were aware of them so that it could do some more fishing. Popkin took the view that to do so would violate the confidentiality

Just last term in the Supreme Court the press argued, in the case of U.S. vs. Caldwell, that it was entitled to a special, absolute privilege against testifying in criminal cases. The Pop affair makes clear that the public also may have a compelling Unfortunately the Suprem Court decided the Caldwell case in terms of power. A 5-to-4 majority held that the government'e general authority to compel testimony overrode the First Amendment claim of the press The majority gave some vague assurances of protection against abuse of the inquisitorial power. But the lower courts, as in the Popkin case, have understandably read the decision as a broad charter for prosecutors.

We can see now that the problem was really a different one. the duty of the courts more delicate. Judges should have to weigh two different claims when the contempt process is used to compel testimony.

One is the claim of privacy. The nature of the particular claimant-reporter, professor or what—is less important than a common-sense view of the social interest involved. In the Popkin case that is strong: The United States especially relies on the interrity of its university community for ideas to break out of the received wisdom that has led the country into so much frus-

traditional duty to testify. Its should look at the real social instrength depends on circumstances also. For example, in an ctual trial the obligation would. be at its strongest, because someone's liberty may be at stake. In a generalized inquiry it would be less strong. In the Popkin case it is notably weak, because the government has shown so little need for the answers to those questions except in terms of a fishing expedition, so little rel-evance to any possible prosecu-

That leads to the other and the more disturbing lesson of the Popkin case. Americans like to believe that theirs is a country of laws, not men. But a very great deal in fact depends on those charged with enforcement of the law. It is one thing if they are men large in spirit, a Henry Stimson or John Harlan, it is another if they are little men, partisan and vengeful. If the spirit of liberty survives in the United States; we shall be grateful to Samuel Popkin and look back on his case as we do on Dr. Barsky's; as a shameful reminder of our vulnerability.

Canadian Stewardess Is Only Hostage

FRANKFURT, Nov. 24 (UPI) .-A gunman with "an East European accent" kidnapped a stewardess aboard a parked airplane today and threatened to dynamite the plane unless Germany returned a Czech defector, accused of murder, to Prague.

The gunman, holding the stewardess at gunpoint on board an Air Canada plane, said he wanted this man brought to the plane and returned to Prague. Czechs want him for murder. The police said the man had given them 24 hours to hand over a Czech who allegedly shot and killed a Czech pilot during a skyjacking-defection to West Germany in June. The man, Ludomir Adamica, 23, is awaiting trial. The gunman, holding the stewardess at gunpoint, said he wanted Mr. Adamica brought to the Air Canada plane and returned to Prague, where the Czechs have charged him with murder.

Otherwise, they reported, he had dynamite in a box and would use it to blow up the plane at Rhein-Main airport. It held only him and the Air Canada stewardess, Margit Sommer, 31, officials said.

The police surrounded the plane and police chief Knut Mueller hargained with the man. He was described as about 50 years old and said to speak German with "an East European accent."

An Air Canada spokesman, Dieter Gramatzki, said the man had boarded the plane disguised in overalls as a workman just before it was due to take off for Montreal Coincidentally, he said. all 21 passengers had been removed shortly before because a woman passenger said she thought aoother passenger "looked suspicious." British Living Standard Called 30 Years Behind That of U.S.

LONDON, Nov. 24 (AP).—The British will take until the year 2001 to catch up with the present living standards of Americans, an official report said today.

The report, commissioned by the Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications to gauge post-office needs 30 years hence, drew a picture of Britain with 20 percent more people turning out and consuming far more goods than now. Colin Leicester, head of the research team producing the computerized long-range forecast, said the predictions ware made "with the heroic assumption that no further major disruption will occur." The main forecasts in the publication, entitled "Britain 2001 AD." were that:

• There will be a car for every two people compared with one for every two bousebolds at present. Britain's working week will shorten by half a day to four and a half days, and annual vacations may average seven weeks. Annual economic growth will rise from the current 2 1 4 reent a year to 3.6 percent, and the average British household will be pulling in as much cash a week as the average American family does now.

Britain's population, now 55.3 million, will be 66.5 million. The report added that every household will have at least one telephone, and people at the turn of the century will be writing fewer letters.

Italians Going to the Polls To Choose Local Officials

ROME, Nov. 24 (AP).—Four million Italians go to the polis Sunday in regional elections providing the first electoral sounding since Premier Giulio Andreotti'a government took office last June. Italy's sagging economy and rising cost of living are the main issues before the voters. Because of the significance of the election as a weathervane, Mr. Andreotti has campaigned hard across Italy in quest of support for the parties of his Local elections will be neld in about 1,000 districts-in regions, provinces, cities and towns. In addition, voters in the Frenchspeaking region of Valle d'Aosta will pick two representatives to the national parliament to replace two dead men elected in the May 7-8 national elections.

Sunday's election will be watched closely for any sign of a trend toward the Socialists, Italy's third largest party, who are still deeply split over whether to rejoin the government or stick with the Communists in the opposition.

Costs Up in October But bread and butter issues are expected to influence the voters. Last week the government announced the monthly rise on record for the cost of living index since World War II. It went up 1,25 perceot in October-a rate of 15 percent on an annual basis. Unemployment is estimated at

Meanwhile, Italy's autumn of strikes shows no sign of cooling off. Forty major contracts are up for renegotiation this year, covering more than four million industrial workers.

30 Jailed Czechs Lose Appeals on Subversion Trials

PRAGUE, Nov. 24 (Reuters) .-Thirty Czechoslovak liberals sent to prison in a series of subversion trials last summer have had appeals of their sentences rejected by the Supreme Court, usually reliable sources said today.

Three of the 46 persons convicted have had sentences cut as a result of appeals. They are Anna Sabatova, three and a half years reduced to three years, her brother Vaclay, 25, whose two-year term was suspended for three years, and Karel Cejka, two years reduced to 18 months. Most of the 13 others received suspended prison sentences and did not appeal, the sources said. Among the unsuccessful appellants were Prof. Milan Euchl, former head of the Communist party's higher-education college former member of the Central Committee and once a friend of the party leader, Gustav Husak. Prof. Huebl received six and a half years.

Another is Prof. Jaroslav_Sabata, former party chief in Brno and a leading theoretician of the liberal era, whose six-and-a-halfyear sentence was confirmed, as was a two-and-a-half-year term passed on his son Jan.

That figurative art may be off to a new start in Italy is amply demonstrated in this giant show which, in some ways, also reflects international situation of Tre c-libition has three painting sections, a sculpture section, and eight retrospectives.

They are rendered in the techniques of the media despised, using photographic blowups, montages, images like color TV projections, stencils, air brushes, all the tools of advertising. The works are sprightly and heroically large. Some of the painters also seem to be flirting with the new American hyperrealism. In Italy, art is closely connected with pol-

Communist commonplaces — the Communist party in Italy is hardly radical-might just be accidental. In any case, most of the social consciousness is selfconscious.

There are exceptions of course. Angeli, once the golden boy of pop, is coming into his own with enigmatic interiors of a wanted roughness. Low key colors, swkward figures and symbols of modern life merely hint at things and so contrast sharply with the explicit slickness around him.

Cuniberti's comic book galety is not ot all harmless. His irony and calligraphy are not far from Novelli, and his tunny monsters sometimes remind one of Matta. There is a refreshingly original force to his humorous attitude with a sly rocial critical edge.

Three others fit even more uneasily into the general frame. Pozzati's bland conundrums of nears and roses, the knobs of the drawers they nestle in sticking out bodily from the canvases, amuse all the viewers who pass by. Marotta's little magic forest environment made out of plastic trees in cleer electric colors and Del Pezzo's wooden rainbows seem like toys for grown-up children. Technically these men may be too pat and too close to interior decoration, yet they represent a positive new brand of figurative ert.

Retrospectives

The retrospectives are dominated by the one devoted to Mario Cavaglieri (1887-1969), who was at the height of his powers in the early 20s. His late impressionist paintings are curiously reminiscent of a figurative trend current in America, the paintings of Porter, Freilicher and Georges, which also derive from Vuillard. A marvelous play of paint-thick dabs, drips, or ancrusted strokes-describes hixurious interiors: fashionable ladies among parrots, palms, chinoiserle and cushions, the light glancing over and around them and the velvet and crystal surfaces. Though at times a little airless, or exhibiting brayura, his elegance is very enjoyable.

Dominico Gnoli, who died in 1970 at the age of 37, is also a painter of international scope. His melancholy vision is like Alice's after she had been dringing from the mysterious bottle. Gnoll is puzzled by the absurdity of everyday life. Its details loom in giant size before him: a vest pocket lies gaping in the middle of a field of patterned suitcloth; a curl of hair falls on a woman's metal cables; a sofs corner is most European shows, as tall as a skyscraper; the imprint of a human body leaves a dent as firm as marble in a just slept-in bed-s monument to sleep? There are also big deadpan bronzes a man's tie all by itself, Minnie Mouse's huge pair of shoes with stiletto heels. This strange super realism, in some ways evoking Magritte, reports on the tragleomedy of human striving by over-emphasizing 'ts humdrum materiality.

In the sculpture section there is much writhing and embracing of bodies in various metals. strange giant object by Trafeli is black and disturbing and might well be the spirit of the Roman traffic jam. Trubbieni, despifar-fetched symbolism, manages to combine odd metals with leather straps in gimmicky but inventive assemblages. Mazzulo's animals are quite straight, while Vangi's marbles and polychromes of people frozen while trying to escape their own skin could only be interpretations of contemporary anxiety.

Second Section

While Section One may be heavy handed at times, it is post abstraction pop and has freed itself from tradition. But the second painting section, "Aspects of Contemporary Figurative Art," has not. Meloni's cheery allusions, the night fent-sies of Zancanaro, the paint flourishes of Treccani and Carcli are here.

The third section, "Outline of Figurative Art From the Late 19th Century Until 1935," proves once again that size has little to do with quality. The small paintings of the Macchiaoli, futurists, the disturbing surrealism of Savinio and his brother De Chirico, the delightful Scipione, Donghi of the Roman school, Viani, Morandi, Melli, and Modigliani and many others often radiate more meaning on one little picture than many a ponderous work ten times its size downstairs.

Among other things the exhibition makes one wonder about he state of women in Italian society: There are about 200 exhibitors of whom only three are women. One also questions the tremendous effort which must have gone into mounting this all too comenhensive survey, and the wisdom of showing so much art all at once, when the far more selective and knowledgeable National Gallery of Modern Art is languishing for lack of funds. Whatever the reasons for this encyclopedic showing, it makes fora is into all of today's figurative trends and is often more for-and red-chalk drawing by Colomblen artist Botero portrays a world peopled by adipose men and women with minute months and noses and airs of prim selfsatisfied distinction. Even the objects, the vegetables and fruit and knives and jugs, are plump. The craft with which this is done is first rate. And what is implied by the omnipresent latness? His retarded ogres may be caricatures of some aspects of 2 certain Latin-American mentality, but they are also the ironic transposition of a universally humon self-idealization, and the organism's gluttonous desire to preserve itself from death. What makes his people so repulsively pathetic is their unbreachable certainty that they are paragons of distinction, beauty, and social qualities. It is this certainty too Bertini, Galerie de Seine. 18 Ruo de Seine, Paris 6, to Dec. 9. Gianni Bertini projects pictures on to photosensitized canvas and works them over in various ways. Machines and the feminine anatomy, more or less blended into one another, are the favored subject and this no doubt explains Bertini'a calling his work "mecart." Bertini displays a cheerful, devil-may-care attitude about his art. He has a genuine Italian mobility which gives much of his paintings considerable whiz. His vocabulary is close to that of publicity, his point satirical and easy to grasp.

Ivan Theimer uses a classical pictorial approach to landscapes upon which be superimposes faint geometric figures which appear to analyze the space portrayed. ONDON THEATER }acall-Brilliant, 'Applause'-Tinsely

By John Walker

ONDON. Nov. 24 (IHT) .-- TWO cheers for "Applause" at Her ajesty's Theatre. It is a show at her had to overcome disscing "Company," a much betr musical and one of the few at had some relevance—it made nnections with an audience's oryday problems.

"Applicuse" is straight escapist and that makes the mistake of ring to be conlemporary. Based Joseph Mankiewicz's splendidenjoyable film "All About Eve." follows the same plot line about ; aging star usurped by an nbilious understudy. But the low's book by Betty Counden id Adolph Green, substitutes mething softer for Mr. Manswicz's malevolent wit and his version of all the old showcliches of overnight urdom that are being so lovingparodied in Hampstead's late ght musical "Dames at Sea." The story, postulating show siness glamour and untouchable ars, was something of a period ece even in 1950 and with every ference to Vietnam or in an terminable sequence set in a y bar. the show loses its edibility. The finale, with the ar giving up everything for the she loves, is distinctly soggy id other changes from the orinal are not for the better. Ken 'alsh's limp-wristed inairdresser, e confidente to everyone and to observer of backstage bitchery. a poor substitute for the film's ame critic, described by Bette avis as "that venomous fish-ifc." That acidulous attitude as gone, to be replaced by someing nearer reverence, a case of ripping away the false show-z tinsel to reveal the real tinsel

Bacall and Eric Flynn in "Applause."

What "Applause" has is Lauren Bacall as Margo Channing, giving a performance as remarkable and as captivating as that of Bette Davis in the film version. If like Margo Channing, Miss Bacall counts critical superlatives, I'll gladly add one "incandesceut" and several "brilliants" to the chorus of praise that has greeted her London debut.

Undulating wickedly across the stage or seductively wiggling her back to the audience, huskily caressing her words or growling out innuendos with perfect timing, she gives a star performance that overcomes all obstacles—the weakness of some of the songs, the indifference of ber own singing voice—and triumphantly sweeps all before it. Her best song, "Who's That Girl?" sung to the late television show of one of her 1940s films, almost justifies the show's modern set-

The irresistible Miss Bacall adds another dimension to an otherwise ordinary show. The music and lyrics of Charles Strouse and Lee Adams, although pleasant enough, are inferior to their work for "I and Albert," The rest of the cast are expert in what they do, but bland and easily forgettable.

It was in 1961 that four university wits provided, with "Beyond the Fringe," the moment when, in the words of Kenneth Tynan. "English comedy took its first decisive step into the second half of the 20th century." Today, Alan Bennett and Jonathan Miller are no longer performers, although they remain entertainers, but the other two, Peter Cook and Dudley Moore, reveal in their new revue "Behind the Fridge"

They sensibly save until last their best sketch, which is indeed hilarious: a conversation on women's lib by their lower-class personae, Dud and Pete, during which Dud energetically irons his plastic mac. But their humor has become more ingrown, less ncerned with mocking the pretentions and pomposities of the world, and frequently predictable.

time has stood still and even re-

They are sometimes easily satistled with their own jokes-you have only to compare Dr. Miller's black politician of 11 years ago with Mr. Cook's feeble attempt to make fun of General Amin to appreciate the loss. The show is half-good with nine of their 18 numbers scoring. The moments their surrealist humor spirals into extraordinarily funny absurdity are matched by the times it topples into smug face-tiousness. They are helped neither by the theater, ill-suited to the intimacies of revue, nor by the staging, nor the use of

Old Master Sale Shows Renewed Faith in Paris Auctioneers

THE ART MARKET

By Souren Melikian

PARIS, NOV. 24 (IHT) .- CORfidence in the abilities of French auctioneers to do justice to a good private collection seems to be growing.

Yesterday, old master paintings and other works once owned by a certain Mr. X were sold at Palais Galliera in Paris by the Audap. Godeau, Solanet group. Two years ago, Mr. X's heirs would have doubtless sent the collection to London for auction in the reasonable ectation that prices would be higher. Paris, then, was no place to sell old masters. Their decision coupled with several other sales scheduled in the next three weeks, demonstrates that Paris auctioneers are gradually winning the faith of those with important works to sell.

The prices at the Mr. X sale indicate that the faith is not misplaced: they were on a very

This was the first group of major old masters from a single collection to be sold in Paris in a long time. Although the catalogue made no mention of provenance, a glance was enough to convince one that most of the pictures had been gathered by a single person. Here was the core of a collection formed over a 50-year period by a "man of A few minor additions other sources had been made to round out the sale-as private sources confirmed. Seldom have I seen a group of pletures summing up so neatly the high standards of collecting that typified the European upper classes at the turn of the century.

Aesthetic

Mr. X was primarily interested in quality, no matter who aigned the pictures. His aesthetic leanings were precise. He wanted still lifes or studies of insects and birds treated as motionless objects. To satisfy this taste, he would buy with equal pleasure a rare study of a bird by Jan Brueghel III ("Jan de Velours," 1568-18261, or another of insects by the lesser-known Jan van Kessel (1626-Everything he selected 1679). was characterized by the most kind of compositional

He bought what is probably one of the finest landscapes by Denis van Alsloot, This landscape—although unsigned, the attribution is certain—with frozen trees and snow-covered plains in the distance is reminiscent of another of his panels, dated 1614 and in the museum at Mosigkau. It made 134,700 francs, a big but acceptable price in view of its quality. PARIS, SATURDAY SUNDAY, NOV. 25-26, 1972 New 'Kennedy Round' _ What U.S. Wants

By Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24 (WP) .- According to Peter Flanigan, the President's assistant for international economic affairs, the American goal in forthcoming trade negotlations is to improve the U.S. trade bal-ance by $11 billion a year—or the equiv-alent of 2 35 percent increase in our cur-rent exports of some $43 billion a year.

The goal offers a rough clue to the serious nature of combined trade and monetary reform negotiations that lie shead. It will require not only another revaluation of the yen, but the reduction or elimination of some trade barriers maintained by Japan and the Common Market, especially the EEC's troublesome restrictions on agricultural products.

Trensury Secretary George Shultz electrified the last International Monetary Fund meeting with a dramatic series of proposals to revamp the international monetary system, producing a mood of opti-mism about prospects for eventual success. But since that time, the United States has made clear that the proposals were presented as part of an integrated package. "To put it plainly." Treasury Under Secretary Paul A. Volcker said in a speech on Oct. 27, "the proposals should not be considered as some kind of smorgasbord—with the diner entirely free to pick and choose among the items he personally finds en-

Delicate Shift in Tone

This appears to be a delicate shift in the U.S. tone. At the IMP meeting Mr. Shultz insisted that the United States was not presenting a detailed blueprint for reform, but a series of principles and ideas. Mr. Volcker, in his speech, seemed to be saying:
This is our package—take it or leave it."

Knowledgeable officials insist that the United States is not trying to be adamant or rigid. Rather, it is trying to get across the idea that all parts of the program are related: If the ultimata idea of mometary reform is to develop a better adjustment process for the balance of payments, American officials say, more sensible rules on trade must be developed.

It is instructive to follow through the arithmetic hy which Mr. Flanigan derives his figure of a U.S. trade improvement amounting to $11 billion. He assumes, optimistically, an "investment wash" be-tween the United States on one hand, and Europe and Japan on the other; net investment by the United States of $1 billion in Canada, Australia, Russia, and other countries for raw materials; net investment of another $1 billion in the underdeveloped countries; and a net inflow of $6 billion in dividends, royalties, interest, etc. That is a plus $4 billion on the incoming side.

But on the outgoing side, Mr. Flanigan adds np: 53 billion for the military; 54 billion for Agency for International Development, Export-Import Bank, etc. spending: and a $2-billion net tourism deficit. Assuming all other figures cancel out, that would mean a $5 billion deficit before considering the trade accounts.

And there. Mr. Flanigan calculates, unhappily, that this year there will be a $6-billion deficit. So, taking the lower end of the range, "we have to improve our trade balance by something like $11 billion & year."

That means pushing the Europeans very hard, as Ambassador William D. Eberle said in his Geneva speech on Nov. 10, to modify an agricultural policy which the United States regards as proctectionist. But the Europeans are having great difficulty in arriving at a common response.

There are likely to be many bitter arguments ahead, especially in the area of non-tariff barriers. All nations are sinners as well as sinned against when it comes to the tricky non-tariff devices. But at least, the trade and monetary depotiations are not starting off with crisis as a backdrop.

Seen Caught in Credit Pinch

Loans by U.S. Banks in U.K. Worry City

Some U.S. bank branches in London are making loans that worry much of the banking community. Medium-term loans are often made without collateral, and maturities and the grace period before repayment begins have lengthened, all compounding the risks.

Among the banks making such loans are those that have flocked to Europe since the mid-1960s to feast on the trade in Eurodollars. They have been caught in a profit pinch, and British authorities wonder aloud whether some of them will stay around much longer. BRUSSELS, Nov. 24 (Renters).

The cost of living continued to The basic reason for the pinch excess liquidity. That enticing

Eurocurrency pool of monies held outside their home countries, a pool swelled largely by dellars from the U.S. balance-of-payments deficit, has flooded too full too fast for the bankers' own good. At the same time, corporate demand for loans has been slack because business has not been so robust. Such a situation puts borrowers in a strong position. They shop around more at competing banks. Interest rates on loans drop. Thus develops a narrowing spread between the rates and the rates they charge bor-

While opinions differ on the size and quality of the profits that U.S. banks in Europe may turn this year, there is no doubt that this narrowing spread puts pressure on the banks to expand their volume of loans. "As a result, they have been giving loans to second- and third-line horrowers at rates that don't even begin to compensate for the risks," says Robert W. Hull, vicepresident in charge of the localrepresentative office of Union Commerce Bank, Cleveland.

Japan Firm Ends Project To Import Gas From Iran

TOKYO, Nov. 24 (AP-DJ).— such as Tokyo Electric Power Co., C. Itoh & Co., a major trading concern, has terminated plans to import liquefied natural gas from Irao because the prospective price of the product was too high for Japanese consumers.

The project, to have involved an investment of about $1.2 billion, was conceived as a major source of energy for Japan over a 20-year period. Deliveries were to have commenced in 1976 with Japan importing 4 million metric tons of Iranian LNG a year. Itoh said it was unable to conclude gas purchase contracts with major domestic utilities,

Itoh originally ouoted a price of about $1.09 per million British thermal units (BTU) to the Japanese utilities, a figure that was later reduced to $1.08. Itoh officials said the Japanese utilities were unwilling to agree to pay more than $1 per million BTU before agreements were reached on the price of gas to be supplied from competing projects under development or consideration in the Soviet Union, Indonesia and other areas.

The utilities are hoping to obtain gas from the other projects at about 90 cents to 95 cents per million BTU, and they did not want to undermine their bargaining position by first agreeing to a higher price for gas from Iran, officials said.

The relatively high price required for the Iranian gas was attributed to the long distance involved.

FTC Alleges Illegal Links By 3 Firms

Common Directors Cited in Complaint

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24 (Reuters).—The Federal Trade Com-mission said today it will issue complaints against Aluminum Co. of America, Kennecott Copper Corp. and Armco Steel Corp. for having "illegal" boards of direc-

The complaints charge that Alcoa and Kennecott both bave Russel Deyoung as a member of the board, while Alcoa and Armoo share the director services of John A. Mayer.

Under anti-trust rules, interlocking directorships among competitors is forbidden.

The FTC claims that Alcoa and Armco are competitors because of the interchangeability of aluminum and steel for certain uses. It said that Alcos and Kennecott are also competitors because copper competes with aluminum in electrical conductor and beat exchanger uses.

The commission said it is offering the parties a chance to enter consent orders, agreeing to the complaint.

How to place your portfolio under investment management starting with as little as $5,000

If you have saved or sequired $5,000 to $50,000 in cash or securities, you naturally want to make your capital grow. Yet you may feel you are actually losing ground due to inflation and taxes, or perhaps to a lack of time for investment decisions.

To help solve this problem, clients in 64 countries have turned to The Danforth Associates Investment Management, a tested plan originally developed by a Boston family to manage its own common stock investments.

The plan thus far has proved, we believe, especially efficient in providing continuing capital growth sopervision for port-folios starting with from $5,000 to $50,000 — though, as in any selection of investments, losses do and will occur.

For a complimentary copy of a 42-page report describing this lested plan, its complete 15-year "performance record," and how it may help you now, simply write Dept. W-15.

COLLECTED POEMS 1951-1971

eight books, A.R. Ammons has language." been creating a body of work that stands outside the day's fashionable modes. He is no incantatory bard, careering down the highways from here to California or hungering after strange gods in foreign lands. The secrets of the marriage bed or illness of the mind or the trauma of divorce have no appeal to this poet and no place in his work. He is ro minimal poet, but a dense one, though his brief poems and narrow lines may suggest the contrary. Nor does he indulge in a running dialogue with himself, adding cryptic notations to the text as an attempt at epic greatness. Nor is he the conventional academic poet of smooth regular ty, trying out French models or Above all-and this may be the major reason for his isolationhe is not a publicly engaged poet. There is in these 400 pages scarcely a reference to the war, to the upheavals of the sixtles, to the subjects that agitate his peers. The world of nature is his preserve and he crisscrosses it continually. He looks at it with an analytical eye, finding the ways of nature a source of con-tinual delight, wonder and thought. But he never sermonizes directly or lectures mankind on its destruction or neglect of the landscape. At a time when the vociferous worship of the countryside seems to have reconstituted itself into a new romanticism, Ammons has remained private and apart. But not unconcerned. The preciousness of the natural world is apparent on every page. Yet nature and what one critic has called "his adventures and return from it" are the very substance of his work. He delights in rendering exactly what he has seen: the gravel bed in the dried-oot stream in "Possibility Along a Line of Difference"; the "working order" of a goldfinch in "Mechanism". the amoebalike forsythia with its uneven pseudopodia in "River"; the way the vine imprints its coil deep in the tree in "Jungle Knot." There is a Thoreau-like steadiness and patience in Ammons, And in both men the original observation is as intense an experience as the writing about it later. Nature, though, serves a larger purpose for Ammons. He finds in it time and again the exact metaphor, the illustrative equiv-alents for his thoughts, insights, speculations. "Thaw," for example, is wonderful in its interplay between the frozen earth and rigid mind. The clearing of a field in "Apologia pro Vita Sua" can be read as the same as erecting a gate to heaven, "Terrain" shows an almost Homeric quality in the way a "region without definitive boundaries" is used for an extended comparison to the soul. Even a poem about making the desert bloom is called "Self-Portrait." In his long speculative "Essay on Poetics," a farm with a thousand acres and a thousand cows is ingeniously and cleverly made to stand for poetic possibilities. Nature for him is reality and "Reality is abon with centers." And he adds, "Lan-guage must not violate... the concrete," for fear of that "separa-

Some of this surely sounds like Frost. But Ammons's observations are more penetrating, more exactly noted, more "scientific" in the literal sense. (His first degree was a BS.) And his poems are free of those homiletics that are found in the work of the older poet. The remarks that Frost makes at the end of "Design" or "A Considerable Speck," for example, would with Ammons be woven unobtrusively into the poems proper. Nevertheless com-parisons with Frost will suggest themselves, sometimes closely as in "Visit," which seems almost a reworking in mood of Frost's carly "The Pasture."

It would be unfair, however, to leave the impression that Aumons is only a nature poet. In fact, some of the finest lines in this collection, perhaps the finest, do not rely narrowly on field and forest. The elegy, "Nelly Myers." blends memory, grief and the weight of the past into the most moving work in the book. "The Strait," exceedingly well done, catches the Greek tone perfectly: "If you succeed, praise the god. If you fail, discover your flaw." "Christmas Eve" unites the trivial and the eternal to bring out the casual as well as the sacred aspects of the occasion, And "Hymn V" makes a plea for a revealed harmony, a whole world that will supersede the fragmented and pitted universe of our recent physics. There is even an unsuspected, humorous side to Ammons where he half-mockingly cries out against his own neglect. I could use, he says, a little destruction perpetrated in my

Although he is not really a difficult poet, he is not easily ac-cessible. He demands concentrated reading. The connections between his images and thoughts are imaginative, not syntactical, Transitions are few, connections are missing. He is a painter who draws one pure line after another , with little or no shading. The language is challenging (rare words, rare forms of familiar words, adjectives used as nouns, etc.); the stanzas are irregular and not always parallel to the thought. Sometimes, as in "One: Many," the poem breaks down under the weight of the material it is forced to sustain. But the technical challenges add to the interest in the work and to that fiber that makes these poems such a pleasure to read. Ammons has not been without ... his champions, but he has not been very visible in the winner's circle. Awards, celebrations, prizes have passed him by. He has received nowhere near the attention lavished on more spectacular and muscular poets. But this considerable collection finally makes . . him a figure impossible to pass by. His voice is an individual one: his production extensive: his work, meticulously made, is both demanding and rewarding at once. It is about time we admitted that we have in him a poet who must be counted in any appraisal of the current literary

Yugoslav's Backhand Exploited

Promising Ashe Reneges to Beat Pilic

By Bernard Kirsch ROME, Nov. 24 (IHT).-Arthur Ashe failed to keep his promise last night and gained the semifinal round of the friendly World Championship Tennis winter championship.

His opponent tomorrow night at the Palazzo dello Sport here is Tom Okker, who advanced last night by beating his buddy. American Marty Riessen, 7-6, 6-4. The other semifinal matches south African Cliff Drysdale and American Bob Lutz. Today is a day of rest.

Ashe advanced by beating Nikki Pilic of Yugoslavia, 7-6, 3-1. Pilic, a lefthander, has a strong slicing serve and a powerful forehand, but his backhand is weak and he lacks a variety of shots. Earlier this week, Ashe watched Plic during an afternoon proctice session and said; "Nikki, I'll hit everything to the forehand," and the Yugoslav, who resembles actor Lawrence Harvey, didn't smile. There wasn't much time for laughs inst night, either.

Pilic was efficient for the first set, holding service until the match went to 6-all. Then it was time for a blast of horns. Whenever a set goes to a tie-breaker in this final WCT event of 1972, a phonograph is turned on and the fanfare resounds while the umpire, oo his perch at center court, weves a little red flag with the initials "SD" oo it which stand for sudden death. And the crowd applauds, except there is no sudden death in this tournament because the best-of-12-point tie-breaker must be won by 3 points instead of 1. WCT European tour director John McDonald said he has tried the fanfare several times in Europe because "when the fans hear the music, they put down their beer and know something important is going to nappen. Ashe ran through Pilic in the second set, winning in 25 minutes. It was the second time in three matches that the American has beeten the 23-year-old Yugoslav. Still, it has been a productive year for the loser. With yesterday's defeat, which made $39,712. If Ashe makes the finals, his earnings would go over $100,000. His total is now $94,775, and the losing finalist in the $50,000 erent receives $10,000. The winoer takes home $25,000. 'Hard to Best'

Ashe has won three and lost three against Okker. The Dutch-man, whose earnings this year are $85,004, said last night that when Ashe is right, "He is very hard to heat."

Okker will have to play better than he did last night to move ahead unless "I cao put all my luck together again." Both Okker and Riessen admitted that Okker was lucky. Three times in the opener, Riessen served for set point end three times he falled. He said later that it had not happened to

He had Okker, 5-2 and 30-15, in the eighth game of the first set when Okker started to hit winners and Riessen narrowly began to miss the lines. After the match, Riessen said that he thought he played well and Okker said that he didn't think he had played well himself. But it'll be the American who will spend the next three days in Rome sightseeing with his wife. He will then keep a promise and spend a week's vacation in Switzerland, brushing up on his skiing. He'll be etaying at the home of his close friend and conqueror. Okker, and they probably won't talk about last night's good and bad luck.

UCLA Five Seeks 7th Crown in Row

By Sam Goldaper Far West

NEW YORK, Nov. 24 (NYT).— UCLA must win the Pacific-B title to qualify for the NCAA tournament and a seventh straight college-basketball championship. Early in its dynasty the Bruins would breeze through their conference schedule. In the last few seasons the Pacific became more basketball-minded and Southern California became a stronger challenger.

Southern California is the consensus pick for another second-place finish and primarily because the Trojans, as the other conference teams, lack center to challenge Bill Walton.

Long Beach State should have no trouble winning another Pacific Coast Athletic Association championship and Sao Francisco is favored to repeat in the West Coast Athletic Conference, Long Beach State finished with a 25-4 record and Ed Ratleff, the 6-8 swingman, who was a unanimous All-America choice and Olympic star, said, "We'll be much better this season." Ratleff is joined by Glenn McDonald, 6-6, and Leonard Gray, 5-6, starters last season.

Two streaks may come to an end as Texas-E Paso challenges Brigham Young's two-season reign in the Western Athletic Conference and Idaho State threatens to halt Weber State from a sixth straight Big Sky championship.
In the WAC, Brigham Young will again count

Coach Clem Haskins has lost three starters at Texas-El Paso, but he has enough replacements to field a team of size, ability and depth to match last seasoo's 20-7 record. The best of the returnees are the forwards, Gus Bailey, 6-5, and the No. 1 rebounder, James Forbes, a 6-7 junior.

In the Big Sky, Idaho State has eight letter-men, including Ev Forms, a 6 8 1/2, 223 scorer. Weber State has three starters back, but lacks

Southwest

Southwestern Louisiana was the natioo'a surprise team as the Ragin' Cajuns, with the best one, two scoring punch, in Dwight Lamar and Roy Ebrow finished 25-4 and made a strong run in the NCAA playoffs. Coech Beryl Shipley has four starters back, including Lamar, the 6-1 senior guard and the oation's top scorer, and Ebron, 6-8, who averaged 23 points and 14.2 rebounds in his first varsity 582500.

Houston is now officially a member of the Southwest Conference, but the Cougars are still three seasons away from eligibility to compete for the That gives someone else a crack at the conference title because Houston figures to be in a class by itself, Coach Guy Lewis has four starters back from a 20-7 club, but only Dwight Jones, the 6-10 star, may retain a starting role.

For conference hooors, Southern Methodist and Texas have the personnel to produce some of the best teams in league history. Sam Hervey, a trensfer from Kilgore (Tex.) Junior College, and Ira Terrell are the newcomers expected to make SMU

Many key players who brought Texas its first cooference title in seven seasons are returning. The best player in the SWC, and one of the best in the nation is 6-6 junior Larry Robinson, who averaged 21.9 points and sparked the Longhorns to an NCAA playoff victory over Houston,

The always tough Missouri Valley Conference has expanded into a 10-team league and New Mexico State, ooe of its two newcomers (West Texas State is the other), should battle Memphis State for the

New Mexico State has three starters from a 20-6 team that played as an independent. The best of the returnees is John Williamson, a 6-2 guard, the nation's sixth best scorer, with a 27.1 ave Truman Ward, 6-6, the leading rebounder for the past two seasons, and Roland (Tree) Grant, a 7footer, are the other key holdovers. Jim Bostic, a sophomore, and Ken Shaw, a junior college transfer and fine playmaker, will fill out the first five. The 6-3, 220-pound Bostie led the Aggies' freshmen with 24.1 scoring and 17.4 rebounding averages.

Beating out Memphis Stete, which coach Lou Henson of the Aggies concedes is the Prescason favorite, will not be an easy task. Memphis State has three starters, including Larry Finch, the confereoce's most valuable player and top scorer, and Ronnie Robinson, a 6-8 rugged rebounder and good scorer. Coach Gene Bartow took oo chances and surrounded himself with three junior college All-Americas—Larry Kenon, 6-9, Billy Bufford, 6-7, and William Westfall, 6-8. All bettered 20-point scoring marks and were top rebounders.

The Big Eight coaches selected Missouri and Kansas State to battle for conference honors. Kansas State has four starters back to defend its title—Steve Mitchell, Ernie Kushyer, Danny Beard and Leon Kruger.

Missouri, which will be playing to its new 12,500scet arena, has its front line back intact. The Tigers are led by John Brown, 6-7, who made the Olympic team but didn't get to play after he suffered a broken foot.

Oral Roberts, Oklahoma City and Creighton, the major independents, are all tournament hopefuls.

Richard Benjamin—Trying to Endure It

NICE, France (IHT). — The scene is New York's P.S. 87, and out steps little Richard Benjamin to make his acting debut as Scrooge:

"I remember I said, 'Bah, Humbug,' and the Principal sald, 'Are you sure it's not "Baa, Humbug?" ' My first criticism! I'm in the fifth grade. I worked so hard and that's all she can Say."

Having been introduced to the actor's bane, critics, Benjamin soon after experienced the actor's greatest joy: he got a laugh. It happened in biology class:

"The teacher said, Here are the sweat glands. I raised my hand and said, 'We say perspiration.' Out! The Principal's office. Who cares? I got a laugh."

So of course Richard Benjamin became an actor, though not, as he had hoped while at the High School of Performing Arts, a tough gangster type. 'It was during 'On the Waterfront' and everyone was tough and slurring. I had a stage name, Richard Hood. Hood for hood-

Instead of a hood, Benjamin became an amusingly neurotic late adolescent, making his film debut as Nell in "Good-bye, Columbus." He was perplexed, callow, urban, Jewish and funny and he continued to play variations of this role-a sort of a man-child," he calls it—until it reached its climax, and end in the long whine that is "Portnoy's Complaint."

"I was learning things through analysis that were veryrevealing to me but that were also very good for Portnoy," he says. He felt he could begin to act his age. "I sensed it was time to make a change, a clean change. You really have to work at it, you can't just be thinking about it."

In Other Words

With a moustache to add maturity and weight, Richard Benjamin is playing a sophisticated and dissolute writer in

Herb Ross's "The Last of Shella," now winding up on the Cote d'Azur. Sitting on the poop deck of a yacht set in the Victorine Studios, he explains the change which he says was best put into words hy the director Milos Forman when they were working together on Broadway last season:

"Milos said to me, Don't let me know how much pain you're in. I don't like a person like that, I like someone to endure it. That's the kind of person I want to play."

As part of the change, Benjamin and his wife, the actress Paula Prentiss, moved from New York's West Side to the East Side. He took the big step when he realized he had been living on the West Side for 30 years and Forman said he'd never make the change. They now live chicly over Richard Avedon's studio but Benjamin seems ambivalent about it:

"There's not enough pleasure in everyday living in New York. One place we almost moved to they said you're fortunate we're getting new street lighting to protect you. What's fortunate about that?"

Richard and Paula met as ern. He was, he says, insufferable: "I came from New York and things came from Illinois and Texas."

"He was so gorgeous and mean," says Paula. "I was so obnoxious. In class I'd say things like, What I think Paula has missed here..."

'He was never repulsive enough," seys Paula.

$10 Shakespeare

They both worked later with Joseph Papp, playing Shake-speare in Central Park. "My parents said, "Ten dollars a week, that's all you're getting?" I said if I have a line I get fifteen. It was hard for them to understand," Benjamin says. He has vivid memories of the tough days of being a struggling actor in New York. "You have to have faith in yourself because no one else does. They constantly tell you forge: about it, it's hopeless. They must over the years get saddened by what they see.

"You have to have this stupid faith—you see someone go ont of a casting directors office. and you say, poor guy he can't ried. make it and you have to think you can. One guy had a system drama students at Northwest- of little cards with his picture and he'd send them out trying to hit the level between hugging these other poor pitiful a person and being out of little pictures printed, too."

It didn't do any good. The big break came when Benjamin auditioned for the touring company of "Barefoot in the Park." He got a big laugh during the andition but never suspected that it came from the director, Mike Nichols.

"Three months later I saw Mike and he said, That will be fine.' I didn't know what he meant, so I said it was nice meeting you." Later Benjamin found out he'd got the job. "I just stood there, I wasn't excited or anything."

Long Association

"Barefcot in the Park" led-to a long association with Nichols's producer Saint Subber and playwright Neil Simon. Benjamin directed the London version of "Barefoot," played in the national company of Couple," and made his Broadway debut in Simon's 'The Star Spangled Girl."

"From that day I worked for Neil Simon and Saint Subber for three years." Benjamin says. "It's a perfect example of why people are nervous at auditions, because a lot depends afternoon I got three years' work.

Benjamin worked with his current director, Herb Ross. years ago. "I was the assistant director-I was really going for coffee-and Herb was the choreographer. The director got fired in Toronto. I didn't know if I was fired, too, but I figured I was, so I left."

Benjamin had been living with Paula, who was about to be sent to London to promote g film she'd made with Bob Hope. As he was out of a joh he wanted to go along, but the studio said they'd have to get married as the Hotel Dorchesterwouldn't accept them otherwise. So they got happily mar-

"Three days ago," says Benjamin, 'I found out from Herb Ross that I wasn't fired Eleven years later! I could have stayed on in Toronto and used the
